Using High-Impact Practices To Advance Equity & Student Success Outcomes

Wednesday, August 18 ~ 1:00-2:30pm (Eastern)

Once the live date has passed, this training will be available on demand.

Overview

Creating a student success culture on your campus means more than providing discrete student support programs targeted at the general student population. The issues of racial equity incorporate an all-inclusive campus environment that should be embedded in every aspect of the educational and social experiences that impact students on campus, especially among those underserved student populations (i.e., African American and Latinx). This webinar will provide an overview of the various components necessary to create a student success culture that significantly advances equity in meaningful ways.

Objectives:

- Review the foundational concepts that can help an institution become more equitable in serving underserved students on their respective campuses
- Understand the importance of collecting disaggregated data that provides essential information from those targeted students who need the most assistance
- Learn how to facilitate involvement from a larger group of campus constituents to create a more welcoming climate for underserved students through self-reflection and assessment
- Learn how to create a more holistic approach for better equity and student success outcomes
- Identify high-impact practices that advance equity and student success outcomes on your campus

Who Should Attend?

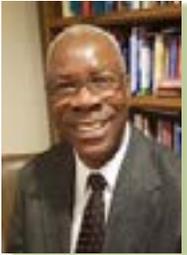

- Administrators
- Enrollment Management
- Faculty
- Student Services/Affairs
- Institutional Research
- Institutional Effectiveness
- Any educator interested in learning more about focusing on equity in education

Using High-Impact Practices To Advance Equity & Student Success Outcomes

Wednesday, August 18 ~ 1:00-2:30pm (Eastern)

Speaker(s)

Higher education is now at a crossroads in addressing the educational inequities that have been revealed within the past year based on the murder of George Floyd and the nationwide social protests that followed. Although the educational inequities among underrepresented students have existed for many decades, the national discussions for change have prompted the higher education community to take a long hard look at itself and how it can substantively change the way it addresses those systemic inequities.

Jerald Henderson currently serves as Board President of AHEE (Association for Higher Education Effectiveness). He has worked in Higher Education for over 30 years and has held faculty and staff positions in the Counseling Center as well as an administrative position in Academic Affairs at the university level.

His expertise is in student persistence and completion, assessment, evaluation research, curriculum / program design, and counseling. He has worked on large-scale projects such as institutional self-studies for re-accreditation, preparation for re-affirmation visits, institutional task forces to improve student retention at postsecondary institutions as well as communication task forces to improve campus climate and culture. He has recently served as a Peer Mentor for the Higher Learning Commission's Persistence and Completion Academy. He has published a book entitled: First Generation Students Can Succeed: A Guide to Choosing and Navigating College. His focus has been providing consultation to postsecondary institutions to bridge the access gaps and increase student persistence and completion rates for first generation and/or minority students who want to attend colleges and universities. Jerald Henderson earned his Bachelor of Arts Degree in English from Roosevelt University; his MS in Social Agency Counseling from Henderson State University; and his Doctor of Philosophy Degree (PhD) from the University of Illinois at Chicago in Curriculum, Instruction, and Evaluation.
